

May McQuade Gill Clarke Resource Fund Reflection

Online journal - this journal is only in its second publication. It's been really interesting to read, especially as I speak Chinese and it's really good at describing concepts in both languages. I've actually been in touch with the editor and he sent me an article to proof read for the next publication. It's been a really lovely link back to the East and I think I will visit the editor when I go back next year.

Dance movement therapy book: this book is a compilation of essays on dance movement therapy. I've found some of the analysis quite vague in its findings and almost inaccessibly specific in the cases studied. There is one really interesting chapter about doing movement with displaced children seeking asylum. I think I will probably refer to this book again as I continue to work with young people. At the moment it feels like I've learnt facts that sound interesting at a dinner party but I've not felt able to apply the theory to my practice. I'd like to find other dance practitioners to speak with and discuss this.
